I envy birds, For fear I never fly. -from A Self Portrait by Sarah Ray, 18 Twenty-six Northwest authors and illustrators, aged 12-20 present this unique anthology of essays, poems and stories: A woman named Margaret makes a bargain with a mythic Grim Hound known as Black Shuck. Neurotic author Ryan James Slugstache finds there is a price on his head-and that his books are predicting the future. Writing on topics as diverse as gum, sticky notes, sorrow, and dragons, these pieces contain: Striking Imagery: No one watches the blind moon rise With opal rivers in her eyes. -from Eternity Unseen by Sophia Babai, 20 Magic: The orbs were spheres floating above my hands, glowing in the dim light. They danced wildly, growing as I summoned more power from within me. -from Life After Orphanage by Brenna Smith, 14 Mystery: Sonya followed my gaze. Be careful looking in it, she warned. You might not like what you see. What? I turned to her. A knowing look was in her eyes....
