Not illustrated. 1915 Excerpt: .sands of some ancient soil, uncovers the glorious perfection of an antique statue, -which but for his toil had been utterly lost to the world. Gertrude Atherton has restored to us Spanish California, the vanished Latin civilization in America, in her two splendid stories Rezanov and The Dooms woman, now republished under the title Before the Gringo Came. 1 Rezanov is the romance of a Russian soldier of fortune who dreamed of a mighty empire on the Pacific. The Dooms woman brings us a wonderful heroine, beautiful Chonita Iturbi y Moncada, the ill-starred girl of noble birth, whose love for Diego Estenga, the scion of a rival house, brings her great romance at the price of inevitable tragedy. Fifteen years ago several young women went into the moonshine region of the Kentucky mountains and spent successive summers instructing the mountaineers in simple medicine and hygiene, singing, sewing, kindergarten work, and the art of friendly relationship with one s neighbors. These young women finally started a settlement school at Hindman which has grown and prospered until one hundred children live in it and two hundred more attend day school. These children are trained especially for the life they must lead in their mountain homes. Social service work is carried on and a market is found for the basketry and the weaving done by the women. The nursing and hospital work also deserves special mention. A story of an incident of this work, Sight to the Blind, 2 written originally...
